{5 marks}

Many years ago, headaches were treated in all kinds of ways .and some of the treatments might be hard for us to believe in the twenty-first century .Thousands of years ago, for example, medicine men used to make holes in the heads of people with headaches, because they believed this would let the headache out .this may seem very cruel to us, But in those days people believed this treatment would make their headache go away.

In ancient Egypt, medicine men had a different way of treating headaches. They used to tie a ceramic crocodile, which was filled with herbs, to the head of patient. The reasons for this are not clear to us today.

In the Middle-Ages, there were hospitals and only people who were rich could afford to go to doctors. But the people that did not go to doctors were usually treated with leeches- small, black creatures that suck blood. They were put on the patient's body near the place where the pain was .for people who had headaches; the leech was usually put on the neck.
